

America's Future Lies in its Ability to Create a New Breed of Global Entrepreneurs

If we are going to focus on maximizing the creation of economic opportunities for Americans, we need to focus on the fostering of American ingenuity on a global basis. As Secretary of State Hilary Clinton stated in a recent speech, "We are a significant force in the world economy and we are here to stay." Our foreign policy needs to center on economic policy because Americans have to eat and put roofs over their heads. America needs to drive economic leadership both at home and abroad. Strength and economic leadership are a package deal.

This means that we need to get out of the way of small business and allow it to flourish. This will enable us to create an exciting new breed of innovators. We need to create a new generation of people like Steve Jobs, and we also have to allow people to be economically independent. All small business is an integral part of the economy, from the car mechanic, baker and plumber, to the doctor, inventor and lawyer. We are all in this game together. Steve Jobs said that we have to "Think Differently." In his honor now is truly the time to put that into practice. We can't turn inwardly and become isolationists—we need to create all of the opportunity possible for our entrepreneurial community. This means that we have to be able to compete fairly in the global business arena. Everyone who has a viable and workable business idea needs to be able to engage in this competition, and other countries need to protect our intellectual property.

Entrepreneurs Professionals has been created to help small business to not only survive, but also to thrive, create jobs and move the economy to a better place. We assist small business endeavors at any stage of their development by helping them to become stronger business owners and by creating strategies to drive business to the small business community. Businesses that have been around 20 or more years, as well as startups and transitional entrepreneurs participate in our program as members and are increasing their success. Our goal is to offer our program so that we can give the small business community a voice and a chance to take back the American Dream.
